

The Nok Culture

The Nok culture was a great ancient African culture. It was located in Western Africa, where today is Nigeria. The culture started to develop around 500BC and mysteriously this great ancient African culture started to disappear around 200AD. During this time the Nok culture invented terracotta and learned to smelt and forge iron. The people of the Nok civilization were the first Africans that knew how to smelt and work with iron and they were also the first sub-Saharan producers of life-sized Terracotta. Most of the people were farmers. The Nok culture was an advanced culture for that time in Western Africa.

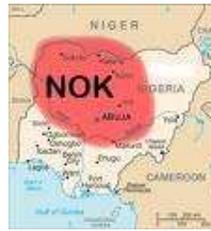

The information about the Nok civilization is changing every day because new artifacts are found.

Over time archeologists have found many artifacts from the Nok culture. The Nok people had a very advanced social system for that time. In the artifacts that the archeologist have found shows that the Nok people were very organized, because even though they were farmers they had a very advanced social system. They knew how to smelt and forge iron. Nok's civilization was the earliest sub-Saharan civilization that produced life-sized Terracotta. The Nok culture was an Iron Age culture. In the evidences that the archeologists found, show that the people of the Nok culture were farmers and that they used iron to make better farming tools. The information about the Nok culture is changing every day because new artifacts are found.

Much of what is known about the Nok culture comes from archeologists. The things that are known about the Nok culture come from artifacts that archeologists found. The Nok people made many artifacts with people and animals. The scientist tried to figure out what were the artifacts and tools that the Nok people had for. The information about the Nok culture is coming from the archeologists.

When new artifacts are found scientist try to find out more details about the Nok culture and our knowledge is getting better. Every time archeologists find a new artifact than people know more about that place where the artifact was found. New information about the Nok culture is found every day and more is known about the Nok culture.

The Knowledge that is known about this ancient African culture comes from archeologists and when they find new artifacts the knowledge about this ancient African culture becomes better. The Nok culture was a great ancient African culture. In 500BC the culture started to develop and mysteriously in 200AD the Nok culture started to disappear. The Nok culture was located in Western Africa where today Nigeria is. The Nok culture was the first sub-Saharan culture that produced life-sized Terracotta. The information that is known about the Nok culture comes from the artifacts that archeologists found. Every time new artifacts are found the information about the Nok culture gets better. The information that is known about the Nok culture comes from artifacts and every time archeologists find new artifacts the knowledge gets better.

Bibliography

- 1) Unknown. "Nok culture". Unknown. Wikimedia Foundation Inc. June 2007. <<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nok>.>
- 2) Christopher D. Roy. "Nok". The University of Iowa. unknown. unknown. <http://www.gateway-africa.com/tribe/nok\_tribe.html.>
- 3) Alistar Boddy-Evans. Nok Culture. Unknown. 2008. About.com. unknown.